SAN DIEGO, CA, June 21, 2007 – MoneyShow.com, the largest multimedia investment education destination for investors, traders, and financial advisors will announce the results of the first ever Traders' Sentiment Indicator tomorrow at the Traders Expo in San Diego. The results revealed that over 61% of traders remain bullish about the market, with 20% predicting increases of 10% or greater in the S&P 500 between now and the end of the year.

In line with these predictions, 26% of respondents reported that they will not make any short sales and another 26% indicated they anticipate that less than 10% of their trades will be short sales for the remainder of 2007. Additionally, more than 49% of traders expect to see no change in interest rates through the end of the year.

Stocks and options emerged as the trading vehicle of choice, with more than 59% of traders expecting those trades to be the most profitable for the duration of the year. Traders also predicted the U.S. dollar will hold or fall moderately in relation to other currencies according to an overwhelming 70% of respondents.

The MoneyShow.com Traders' Sentiment Indicator polled active traders from its subscriber list between June 11 and June 15. Questions regarding the outlook for the S&P 500, short selling, Federal Reserve, and currencies from June until the remainder of the year were asked.

“MoneyShow.com is pleased to provide traders with an up-to-the minute perspective on the sentiment in the markets from many of the nation’s active traders,” said Tim Bourquin, MoneyShow.com Trader Content Director. “According to our first ever Traders’ Sentiment Indicator, traders are excited about a bullish market with stable interest rates and strong trading opportunities throughout the remainder of the year.”

The complete findings of the Traders’ Sentiment Indicator will be available in the Traders’ channel on MoneyShow.com after it is released at the Traders Expo in San Diego.
